The nameless dentist, having, doubtless only this latter class of persons in view, is in all probability the reason why he was led to say in his communication of the 15th ult., "that if the author of the article in the 1st ult., for his eminent dentist had been at all enlightened by its use. I have also seen many others who do not appear to be at all affected by it."

may in his communication of the 15th ult., that if the author of the article in the last ut., or his eminent dentist had been at all enlightened upon the subject, they would have been as public as a market place.

Realizing this fact, and also knowing that there are other instances where many very important cases are being treated by the same one-sidedness, therefore I very cheerfully take this present opportunity, and I have no doubt but will be able to do so again, to bring before you, with me, to thank him for informing the public of our ignorance as to the red rubber, mercury and its effects.

I find in the printed report of the meeting of the Dental Society of the month of May, that the following resolution was passed, viz: "That this Society considers rubber unfit for dental purposes as a base for amalgam."

In all the large cities, as New York, Phil-to get business by under-bidding in price, and the rubber exactly answered their purpose. And I contended that if gold had not gone up to so high a premium, the use of the rubber would have mainly been confined to this class of dentists.

Therefore it was not for its superiority over gold, but rather for the reason that the public had been getting something cheaper than gold at that time. This was excusable whilst gold was at so high a premium, as it has been for the past eight or nine years. And now it might be well to have something cheaper than gold if, for a while, it could be found that gold if it proved to be as healthy to be worn constantly in the mouth.

Immediately after the consultation with the Institute, the following advertisement appeared in the London Standard and in the
